Sena Cases Dockable Case for Apple iPhone

Posted 10.24.07 | By Jeremy Horwitz | Add Your Comments

Nearly four months have passed since Apple released the iPhone, and two waves of cases -- the rushed, early ones, and the somewhat better, post-launch releases -- have become widely available. Not surprisingly, iPhone case releases have slowed down as new iPod models have demanded manufacturers' attention, but today, we're quickly looking at five recent options of different types, one more noteworthy than the rest.

The final two iPhone cases we're looking at today are from Sena Cases, which specializes in luxury leather case designs, many adapted from similar cases for PDAs and iPods. In the last month, the company has released the Dockable Case ($52) and MagnetFlipper Case ($52) for the iPhone, two different types of flip-closed cases with iPhone face-protecting, magnetic-sealed leather lids. Each comes with a plastic belt clip, metal nub, screw, and installation wrench, as well as a red carrying bag.

When closed, MagnetFlipper and Dockable Case cover the same parts of iPhone: its entire face, its back except the camera hole, its sides except the corners, the left switch and volume buttons, its top except the headphone port, and its bottom except for the Dock Connector, and small holes for the bottom speaker and microphone. Dockable also covers the iPhone's top right corner, including its Sleep/Wake button, when closed; MagnetFlipper leaves this part exposed, but covers more of iPhone's back around the camera. Overall, both cases offer a good but not great level of protection, and neither prevents you from using iPhone's speakerphone functionality.
